p. 50, ¶ 4, line 1 – “There are again two methods of removing the causes of faction: the one, by destroying the liberty which is essential to its existence; the other, by giving to every citizen the same opinions, the same passions, and the same interests.”

p. 51, ¶ 2, line 14 – “But the most common and durable source of factions has been the various and unequal distribution of property.”

p. 52, ¶ 4, line 1 – “If a faction consists of less than a majority, relief is supplied by the republican principle, which enables the majority to defeat its sinister views by regular vote.”

p. 53, ¶ 2, line 1 – From this view of the subject it may be concluded that a pure democracy, by which I mean a society consisting of a small number of citizens, who assemble and administer the government in person, can admit of no cure for the mischief of factions.”
