[N.B. Though only part of sentence is highlighted, the whole reference as described is to be read.]

p. 151, ¶ 1— “MOST HOUSE MEMBERS spend a substantial…”

p. 152, ¶ 1, line 3— “…they believe that their constituents will apply a heavier…”

Ibid., ¶ 2, sentence 1— “So members of Congress go home to present themselves…”

Ibid, ¶ 2, line 4— “And their object is to present themselves as a person…”

Note: The Congressmen are nurturing trust from their constituents.

Ibid., ¶ 2, line 8— “I am willing to put myself in your hands temporarily; I know…”

Ibid, ¶ 2, line 17— “So trust becomes central to the representative-constituent…”

p. 153, ¶ 1, last sentence— “Presentation of self enhances trust; enhancing trust…”

Ibid, ¶ 2, line 2— “The pursuit of power, for example, is sometimes justified…”

p. 154, ¶ 2 (summary)— (I) Delegate justification means congressional representatives should follow voters’ wishes. (II) Trustee justification means congressional representatives should use their own best judgment.

Ibid., ¶ 3, line 7— “They want their representatives, it has been said, to be common people…”

Ibid., ¶ 4, line 6— “On the vast majority of votes, however, representatives can do…”

p. 155, ¶ 2, line 1— “How can representatives increase the likelihood that their…”

Ibid., ¶ 2, last sentence— “Presentation of self enhances trust; trust enhances the…”

Ibid., ¶ 3, sentence 1— “the traditional focus of political scientists on the policy aspects…”

Note: Since this article was written in 1978, the pattern of Congressmen returning home has increased greatly. The practice now is that many (if not most) members of Congress leave late Thursday for home and return to Washington early Monday morning. They have a special parking lot for congressmen and senators at Reagan National Airport just a mile from the capitol.