In a democracy, people do not live in echo chambers or information cocoons.

Louis Brandeis, one of America’s greatest Supreme Court justices, insisted that the greatest threat to freedom is “an inert people.”

How will the Internet and the explosion of communications options alter the capacity of citizens to govern themselves?

First, people should be exposed to materials that they would not have chosen in advance.

The general conclusion...