RE: Proposed Changes to the Major and Minor
DATE: September 26, 2018

Overview of Proposed Changes

The Gender & Women’s Studies Program has not been substantively revised since it was approved by Faculty Assembly in 1998. While the name of the program was changed to reflect developments in the field and trends in program and department names nationwide, the actual curriculum of the major and minor have not been significantly updated. Since 1998 there has been considerable turnover in faculty contributing to the program and a great number of new courses that we believe should contribute to the GWS program. Additionally, we are making changes to the GWS Core Requirements to reflect shifts in departmental course offerings as well as adding new courses to the Core which will increase course availability to students and ensure a timely path to graduation.

Rationale for Each Revision - MAJOR

1. We are changing the prefix from WST to GWS for courses offered by the program to reflect the program name change and for logical consistency. This will also make it easier for students to find courses. (See attached Memo to the Undergraduate Curriculum Council).

2. Adding ENG 375 (Theories of Diverse Sexuality) to the second section of the Core. (See letter of support from Amy Shore, Chair, Department of English). This section of the Core is devoted to theoretical perspectives in the field of Gender & Women’s Studies. The GWS program does not have a dedicated course of its own in this area and relies on courses offered by ENG, PHL and POL. Given how frequently each of these courses are offered, in light of faculty demands in their home departments, adding ENG 375 to this area will help ensure that a least one theory course will be offered nearly every semester, and certainly once in an academic year.

3. The next section is devoted to international perspectives on gender and women studies. Here we have removed COM 422 (Intercultural Communication) whose current instructor does not feel that the course, as taught, contains sufficient focus on gender and women’s studies to warrant inclusion in the program. We have added HIS 212 (Women in History) and POL 378 (Gender and Global Politics) to this area. (See attached letters of support from Department Chairs). Again, adding these courses will provide greater continuity and availability, particularly in light of the fact that GWS 300 (International Perspectives on Women) and GWS 396 (Gender and the Workplace) are frequently taught by adjuncts and, depending on availability, can be at times difficult to staff.

4. The next section is a new addition and is focused on ensuring that majors in Gender & Women’s Studies take at least one course on the history of women. HIS 248 and HIS 249 (U.S. Women’s surveys) are offered every semester and HIS 212 and HIS 348 are offered bi-yearly and sometimes more frequently. There will be no problem in students being able to fulfill this new requirement. (See letter of support from Department Chair).
5. The next two sections are devoted to ensuring that students take at least one course in the Humanities and one course from the Social/Behavioral/Natural Sciences. Given the way that the electives are currently structured, a student could, for example, get through the major without taking a single course in the Social/Behavioral/Natural Sciences.

6. The only alterations to the capstone component are the change to the course prefixes and the deletion of HIS 412 Seminar in Women’s History which is no longer offered by the History Department.

7. We have deleted the “Concentration” area found in the old major, increased credits in the Core, and increased credits in the Electives area. Students will now take five electives courses, a minimum of which must be at the 300/400 level from the approved lists of Humanities and Social/Behavioral/Natural Sciences courses. Students may only take two courses from a single discipline: this is to ensure that students get a breadth of courses and do not focus on areas, like HIS, where there a great number of courses in the approved lists.

8. We have retained the Cognate requirement regarding Computer Literacy.

9. The note indicates that students need to have a C- or better in courses credited to the major. This is in keeping with what many Departments on campus require.

10. We have retained the stipulation that no more six credits of GWS 399, GWS 498, and GWS 499 may be credited to the major.

11. We now require that a course cannot be counted in more than one area. For example, a student could not count HIS 212 twice in the major.

12. The lists of courses have been updated with courses that are no longer offered removed. The GWS Curriculum Committee sent out a survey to faculty whose courses were included in the major and minor and reached out to those who had courses that likely fit into the GWS program asking them: a) what percentage of the course content did the faculty believe was dedicated to gender and women’s issues; b) how often the course was offered; and, c) did the faculty feel there was any reason why the course should not be part of the Gender & Women’s Studies Program. In this way we were able to clean up as well as update the lists.

Rationale for Each Revision – MINOR

1. We are changing the prefix from WST to GWS for courses offered by the program to reflect the program name change and for logical consistency. This will also make it easier for students to find courses. (See attached Memo to the Undergraduate Curriculum Council).

2. We have removed GWS 260 as an option in the core. Multiple sections of GWS 200 are now offered every semester and it is not difficult for students to enroll in this course.

3. Adding ENG 375 (Theories of Diverse Sexuality) to the second section of the Core. (See letter of support from Amy Shore, Chair, Department of English). This section of the Core is devoted to theoretical perspectives in the field of Gender & Women’s Studies. The GWS program does not have a dedicated course of its own in this area and relies on courses offered by ENG, PHL and POL. Given how frequently each of these courses are offered, in light of faculty demands in their home departments, adding ENG 375 to this area will help ensure that a least one theory course will be offered nearly every semester, and certainly once in an academic year.

4. The next section is devoted to international perspectives on gender and women studies. Here we have removed COM 422 (Intercultural Communication) whose current instructor does not feel that the course, as taught, contains sufficient focus on gender and women’s studies to warrant inclusion in the program. We have added HIS 212 (Women in History) and POL 378 (Gender and Global Politics) to this area. (See attached letters of support from Department Chairs). Again, adding these courses will provide greater continuity and availability, particularly in light of the fact that GWS 300 (International Perspectives on Women) and GWS 396 (Gender and the Workplace) are frequently taught by adjuncts and, depending on availability, can be at times difficult to staff.

5. We have deleted the “Concentration” area found in the old minor, and replaced with requirement for students to take one course from the Humanities list and one from the Social/Behavioral/Natural Sciences list

6. The only change to the Electives requirement are the prefix changes on GWS 399, GWS 498 and GWS 499.

Changes in Resources and Rationale for Changes

The changes proposed will ensure that students are able to graduate on time. The Gender & Women’s Studies Program has a small budget and relies heavily on the offerings of other departments. (Please see the letters of support from Chairs of Departments who offer courses that are included in the major). The lists of approved courses not only offer breadth but are also robust enough that students will not be scrambling for courses. In recent years the various Deans of CLAS have been very supportive of the program and have approved the hiring of adjuncts to staff and assist in growing the program. Difficulty staffing GWS 300 and GWS 396 has had less to do with institutional financial support as with finding qualified faculty or adjuncts to teach those courses both of which fulfill the general education requirement in World Awareness – Social/Behavioral Sciences.
